Being a part of something positive

Communities can help kids be safer by having more youth programs. You have teens showing other teens, "I'm doing something positive, you should come with me." Community members can continue to support the programs that are trying to prevent violence with funding, and back us up when you see us trying to do things. Just encourage young people to be a part of something positive

Develop meaningful relationships outside your own race .....shakira

Great answer shakira, having good relationships with people is the best way of keeping peace,

Communication is key and being able to understand and learn from others that may have a wildly different view from you, being open to their thoughts and beliefs. Also the media needs to share more stories of positivity and peace rather than violence and despair to give hope to our communities

Nat

It's all about communication for me, trying to understand our neighbours and empathise with their positions. Everybody does things for a reason and if we can understand and communicate with each other better that'd be a great start. -Dan UK

I agree, I think we need more understanding rather than the polarised world we live in currently, understanding and forgiveness. — ANONYMOUS

The government need to create and emphasis laws that honour peace and unity
