Career guidance can be helpful if done in a way that encourages people to explore options and not in a way that pushes people towards any particular career.

It's helpful to know what you need to do to get the job you want and what that job would involve you doing.

It's also good to know what your current skills and interests might help you to be suited for.

MADINA N.

yes, it builds self-confidence and take ownership of professional lives.

Good career guidance should involve thinking about resources as well as what the learner has the ability to do. That way a child can find new goals that are still realistic.

Fabian

Career guidance is important if done well. Sometimes people give fake guidance and make children aim for careers that they don't have the grades in i.e. doctor

Gina

What about if you get career guidance and could become a doctor because you have that caring heart and good science grades but you don't have the funds to achieve your dream. Will it not make you too discouraged?

Through career guidance, learners are able to be guided well to choose a career especially at crossroads i.e when you don't have tuition to go for higher education and yet to achieve your goal, you need to. Career guidance comes in to support you both mentally and psychologically to be able to choose what's best for you at that particular moment

Joshua

It's so important, because helps in making an informed decision for example in Uganda,the education system changed and what people learnt 2001 in S2 is no the same children are learning now in 2023 in the same class.

I addition it helps them to have best job careers in their life time
